Cable (electronic) A cable (electric or telephone) is a type of electrical connection between a source of electricity or telecommunication and a load. It is composed of one or more conductors; usually, one (called a single-conductor cable) or multiple conductors (called a multi-conductor cable, especially if the conductor is protected with an outer sheath); and an insulation and a shielding system. Conductors can be metal wires or other conductors, such as optical fibres or gas tubes. "Cable" can also refer to a metallic cable used for electrical power transmission. Uses of cables Cables are used in many ways to transport electricity, data, or any type of signal. The most commonly-used cables are: Two wires: One wire is used
